

30 Nov 2017 | News

QUOTED. Nov. 30, 2017. Kwame Ulmer.

by

Check out what industry expert Kwame Ulmer, founder of the new group "MedTech Color," had to say about racial disparities at device firms.

"When I'd go to manufacturing facilities, I would consistently see people of color on the shop floor. Now, when I say 'the shop floor,' I mean the people who are actually making the devices – so, generally, the lowest-paid people are black and brown people. But when I would meet with the executives, they would look much different. They'd be middle-aged, Caucasian men. That always struck a chord with me – and not in a good way – because I thought there would be more diversity up and down the ranks, but there isn't." – Kwame Ulmer, founder, MedTech Color

> Find out more: A Helping Hand: 'MedTech Color' Aims To Move Minorities From Shop Floor To Executive Suite

Click here for a free trial of Medtech Insight