US FDA is approving 30-day change notices at a breakneck pace for device-makers enrolled in an agency program that measures manufacturing maturity and quality. See what FDA's Cisco Vicenty said about it here.

"The average time now is ... probably 2.8 days to approval for change notices [for firms enrolled in FDA's Case for Quality Voluntary Improvement Program]. One of the more interesting things we're seeing ... is that some notices are being approved even more quickly than that." –Cisco Vicenty, program manager, Office of Compliance, US FDA Center for Devices and Radiological Health
